James Laurence is a Post-Doctoral Research Fellow based the Cathie Marsh Institute for Social Research, University of Manchester and the Centre for Social Investigation, Nuffield College, University of Oxford. His current research explores how issues of ethnic diversity, immigration and socio-economic inequality contribute to the creation and dissolution of social capital, cohesion and inter-group relations. His other interests include the impact of micro- and macro-scale economic hardships for social, civic and political attitudes and behaviours, and ethnic-inequalities in violent crime.
